The exhibition, Afghanistan: Hidden Treasures from the National Museum, Kabul showcases some of the most remarkable archaeological finds in Central Asia, providing a glimpse into the ancient world at the heart of the Silk Road. The artefacts in this exhibition were once thought to have been lost forever, casualties of warfare. In reality, during years of turmoil the director and curators of the National Museum in Kabul had — at great personal risk — secretly hidden masterpieces from the collection in vaults of the Central Bank in the Presidential Palace.

Learn more about the ancient and contemporary stories behind this exhibition and the four archaeological sites where these incredible objects were found.
